

CAPITOL RIDERS

OLYMPIA, WA.

Hoofbeats - September 2011

General meeting Oct 4th, 7pm
Tom-Tootie Coffee, Connie Treats

Things are winding down for the year. The camp outs are done with only scheduled and impromptu day rides to go. This is just as well as the rains have come and snow had been recently forecasted to drop to 5,500 feet in the North Cascades.

The White Pass weekend was cancelled for lack of willing participants. Who knows, those going may have had to compete for parking with hunters. And to my knowledge, no one made it to Buck Creek for the Meridian Riders Prize Ride. Carrie and Barry did go to Keenes though.

Traci is planning a ride to Marmot Pass in the Quilcene on October 10th. It's her day off and less vehicles to contend with at the trailhead. Not a lot of parking space. Traci plans on leaving early. This ride (or hike if you are a hiker) is a must do for the Olympics. Roundtrip length is 10.6 miles. Most of the elevation gain is at the end, from 3500 to 6000 feet. Call Traci at 360-490-2878.

With the fire danger passing it's looking good for an Oakland Bay chapter work party at Kennedy Creek sometime this coming month. We'll know more at the general meeting.

For those needing passes to ride the Fort Lewis properties, the link on the chapter web site is working again. If you don't use it to make an appointment they've been turning you away at the main gate. The site can be slow or fast. When it's slow it really is sllloowwww. So be patient, it'll work.

We had a very informative presentation by Vivian Eason at the September 6th meeting. Vivian provided many handouts and spoke about dealing with pets and livestock in emergencies. Thank you Vivian!

Speaking of being prepared - some of you live in areas that can be at risk for grass fires. Do you have a plan to move ALL your animals to safety? Are you Firewise? (have you protected your structures from wildfire by cutting trees and shrubs back from the buildings, trimming lower limbs from trees and generally making it much harder for fire to reach the structures?) See firewise.org for more information.

Sandra White has a volunteer opportunity for you at the Northwest Equestrian Center in Rainier on the October 1st. You'll need to be there at 6:45 am. Give Sandra a ring at 360-888-9686.

The Green Mountain day ride is on October 8th. There are 30 plus miles of trails. Barry Yoseph is trailboss. Call Barry at 360-951-2093. Directions to the Gold Creek trailhead are on the web site and on page 2. Remember your Discover Pass as well as chair and lunch!

October 11th, 3 to 7 pm, is a WSTC trail conference at the Lacey Community Center on Pacific Avenue east of Carpenter Road. Advance registration is required and a nice representation from equestrian users would be beneficial. You'll need to use a computer, no phone. Go to <http://form.jotform.com/form/91920015744> to register and there will be free pizza!

National Mule Day is October 26th and the Capitol Forest closes to horses for the year on October 31st. It will open again on May 1st.

Ritz Duchesne has planned a dental clinic on November 19th at her property on Spurgeon Creek Road. Appointments start at 9 am. Call Ritz at Cell: 608-449-0319 or home: 360-438-1805.

Always, always be aware of your location. Connie Bailey recently sent out an email telling of how an older friend fell off his horse and needed medical assistance. Scatter Creek now has address numbers on the power poles so glance at them going in. For those with GPS, local 911 dispatch can take coordinates if that is all you have.

No potable water. Certified weed seed free feed is recommended. Discover Pass is required.

GPS, Map and Compass class

It's time to start thinking about this again as we'd put it off until winter when things slowed down. It had been decided to hold it at Tom and Tootie's as they have a wide open view over the water. This way we can more easily align our maps to distant landmarks.

The date will likely be a Saturday and in daylight. If you've been waiting for this it is suggested you clear your calendars. We can discuss at the general meeting.

Chicken Jambalaya

Serves 10

Prepare the chicken and sausage at home and freeze in Zip-loc bags, along with the broth. Chopped onions and green peppers can also be done in advance. A double batch will squeeze into a 12" Dutch oven. Shrimp can be added or substituted for the chicken. Wild rice can be used instead of long-grained rice.

1 broiler-fryer chicken, 2 1/2 to 3 lbs. - remove bones and skin

3/4 pound spicy sausage links

1 28 oz. can tomatoes

1 cup long grain rice, uncooked

1 onion, chopped

1 green bell pepper, chopped

1 clove garlic, minced

1 sprig parsley, sniped

1 teaspoon salt

1/8 teaspoon pepper

1/2 teaspoon Tabasco pepper sauce

2 tablespoons butter

2 cups chicken broth

COOKING INSTRUCTIONS:

1. In a pre-heated 12" Dutch oven brown sausage and cut into bite size pieces. Remove most of the grease from the Dutch oven.

2. Add butter and sauté onion, green pepper and garlic until tender.

3. Place chicken, sausage, broth, tomatoes, thyme and Tabasco pepper sauce into the Dutch oven.

4. Heat contents to a boil. Stir in rice and reduce heat.

5. Cover and simmer for about 25 minutes or until rice is cooked.

6. Sprinkle with parsley and serve

CHARCOAL HINTS: Use 10 - 12 briquettes underneath and 8 - 10 on the lid.

PREPARATION HINTS: To debone and remove skin of the chicken, place in a large stew pot, cover with water, season with salt and pepper. Heat to a boil and then reduce heat for 45 minutes. Remove chicken from broth and remove skin and debone. Strain and save 2 cups of this broth for the recipe.

Gutsy Wrangler and Huge Horse Save Boy From Grizzly

September 18, 2011 in Outdoors

Grizzlies are high profile this year.

A lingering winter and late berry crop kept bears in proximity to humans longer than normal, perhaps contributing to a stream of headlines about grizzlies killing people and people killing grizzlies.

Meanwhile, a young lady on a big horse charged out of the pack of grizzly stories near Glacier National Park. In a cloud of dust, the 25-year-old wrangler likely saved a boy's life while demonstrating that skill, quick-thinking and guts sometimes are the best weapons against a head-on charging grizzly.

On July 30, Erin Bolster of Swan Mountain Outfitters was guiding eight clients on a horse ride on the Flathead National Forest between West Glacier and Hungry Horse, Mont.

"It's the shortest ride we offer," she said Wednesday, recalling the incident. "We'd already led two trips that morning. It's always been a very routine hour-long loop, until that day."

The group included a family of six plus a vacationing Illinois man, who'd booked the trip for his 8-year-old son's first horse-riding experience.

The young boy was riding Scout, a steady obedient mount, following directly behind Bolster, who was leading the group on Tonk, a burly 10-year-old white horse of questionable lineage.

Tonk isn't the typical trail mount. Best anyone knows, he's the result of cross-breeding a quarter horse with a Percheron – a draft horse. Bolster is 5-foot-10, yet she relies on her athleticism to climb into the saddle aboard Tonk.

“He was one of the horses we lease from Wyoming and bring in every year,” Bolster said, noting that she’d picked him from the stable in May to be hers for the season.

“He’s a very large horse – 18 hands high. That intimidates a lot of riders. But I’ve always loved big horses. He’s kind of high-strung and spooky, the largest of our wrangling horses. I like a horse with a lot of spirit, and I was really glad to be on him that day.”

Bolster has accumulated a wealth of experience on and around horses of national and even world class. She started riding at 4 years old, became a pro trainer at 15, graduated from high school at 16 in Roanoke, Va., and ran a riding academy for several years.

Seeking a more laid-back lifestyle, she wrangled in Costa Rica and the Dominican Republic before moving to Whitefish three years ago to guide tourists during the summer around Glacier National Park and ski through winter.

“It’s the country, the mountains and the idea of seeing lot of wildlife that appealed to me, ironically enough,” she said.

Bolster quickly racked bear experience, too, although until July 30, it was always at a distance.

“At the peak of the season, we were seeing bears daily,” she said. “The wranglers name them so we can let each other know where they are. Usually the bears just keep feeding in the distance or they run away when we come. Just seeing them is a treat for us and our guests.”

Because they guide around Glacier Park, bear awareness is part of the preparation wranglers get when hired by Swan Mountain Outfitters.

“We go over a lot of wildlife scenarios in our training,” Bolster said. “We learn to watch our horses for signals of possible trouble so we can steer clear.”

That’s the key, she said: Avoid trouble with a moose or a bear.

“We can’t use pepper spray when we’re riding because that could blind the horse,” she said. “And using a gun would spook the horses and probably produce more danger than safety.”

That’s how she went to work that day: a young but seasoned pro rider on a new, huge and spirited horse, unarmed in the wilderness with eight dudes.

“It was a pleasant ride until we came around a corner on the trail and my horse stopped firm and wouldn’t move,” Bolster said. “He never refuses to go, so that caught my attention quick.”

But not fast enough to avoid the spike white-tailed deer that burst out of the brush and glanced off Tonk’s left front shoulder.

As Tonk spun from the impact, Bolster saw a huge grizzly bear crashing through the forest right at the group in pursuit of the deer. Horses panicked and guests grabbed saddle horns for the ride of their lives. “No amount of training could keep a horse from running from a 700-pound charging bear,” she said.

Seven of the horses sensed the danger, peeled out and galloped back on the trail toward the barn. But Scout bolted perpendicular to the trail into the timber packing the 8-year-old boy.

“The deer peeled off and joined the horses sprinting down the trail,” Bolster said. “So the bear just continued running right past me. I’m not sure the bear even knew the roles had changed, but now it was chasing a horse instead of a deer.” The grizzly was zeroed in on Scout and the boy – the isolated prey in the woods.

Adding to the drama, the boy’s father, an experienced rider, could not convince his horse that it was a good plan to ride to his son's rescue.

"The last thing he saw over his shoulder as his horse ran away was the grizzly chasing his boy," Bolster said.

With the bear on Scout's heels, Tonk's instinct was to flee with the group of horses. But Tonk responded to Bolster's heels in his ribs as she spun the big fella around. They wheeled out of a 360 and bolted into the trees to wedge between the predator and the prey.

"The boy was bent over, feet out of the stirrups, clutching the saddle horn and the horse's neck," she said. "That kept him from hitting a tree limb.

"But all I could think about was the boy falling off in the path of that grizzly.

"I bent down, screamed and yelled, but the bear was growling and snarling and staying very focused on Scout. "As it tried to circle back toward Scout, I realized I had to get Tonk to square off and face the bear. We had to get the bear to acknowledge us.

"We did. We got its attention – and the bear charged.

"So I charged at the bear."

Did she think twice about that?

"I had no hesitation, honestly," Bolster said. "Nothing in my body was going to let that little boy get hurt by that bear. That wasn't an option."

Tonk was on the same page.

With a ton of horse, boulder-size hooves and a fire-breathing blonde thundering at it, the bear came within about 10 feet before skittering off to the side.

But it quickly angled to make yet another stab at getting to Scout and the boy – who had just fallen to the ground.

"Tonk and I had to go at the bear a third time before we finally hazed him away," she said.

"The boy had landed in some beargrass and was OK. Scout was standing nearby."

Bolster gathered the boy up with her on Tonk, grabbed Scout's lead and trotted down the trail.

"The boy was in shock," she said. "I looked back and could see the bear had continued to go away through the woods, but I had another five or 10 minutes of riding before I got back with the group."

Not until she reunited with her riders – all OK and standing in various stages of confusion with their horses – did she start to shake.

"I looked at Tonk, and he was wet with sweat and shaking, too," she said.

She was especially concerned for the boy's father, who probably suffered the most terror in the ordeal.

"He was fine, and I got my biggest tip of the season," Bolster said. "My biggest hope is that the boy isn't discouraged from riding. This was a one-in-a-million event."

For the next few days, the outfitter shut down the trail rides and Bolster joined other wranglers and a federal grizzly bear expert to ride horses through the area looking for the bear.

“They tracked it for a long way and concluded that it kept going out of the area,” she said. “Judging from the tracks and my description of how high the bear came up on Tonk, the grizzly expert estimated it weighed 700-750 pounds.

“This was a case of us being in the wrong place as a bear was already in the act of chasing its natural prey. He was probably more persistent because he was really hungry.”

Bolster and the other wranglers vowed to have bear spray on their belts to make sure they can defend their guests during breaks on the ground.

“But when you’re riding, the horse is your best protection, if you can stay on,” she said.

“Some of the horses I’ve ridden would have absolutely refused to do what Tonk did; others would have thrown me off in the process. Some horses can never overcome their flight-animal instinct to run away.”

In those minutes of crisis, the big lug of mongrel mount proved his mettle in a test few trail horses will face in their careers.

Tonk’s mettle moved Bolster. She wasn’t about to send him back to Wyoming with the other leased horses. “Two weeks ago, I closed the deal and bought him,” Bolster said as she was wrapping up her 2011 wrangling season. “After what he did that day, he had to be mine.”
